THE NEW WILD
LIFE IN THE ABANDONED LANDS
A DOCUMENTARY FILM

Things grow from the cracks of ruin.
In the cracks of great change are small stories.

'wonderful'
George Monbiot, The Guardian

'unforgettable images … evocative, informative, poetic … highly relevant'
Ambassador Markus Reiterer, Alpine Convention

'peaceful and tense, simple and fertile, smooth and complex'
Myriam Gast Loup, Head of programming, FIFE International Environmental Film Festival

'a meditation … beautiful, moving … a tone that is measured, elegiac, almost ghostly'
Tom Pow, Author of In Another World – Among Europe’s Dying Villages

'calm, balanced, elegant, deep: very human'
Gianfilippo Pedote, Producer of All about you, Chemical Hunger and Anima Mundi
SYNOPSIS

As rural populations age and decline, new and surprising landscapes are appearing across Europe. Farmland lies abandoned, reclaimed by a self-willed natural world: trees are growing where once there were fields; wild animals roam free amongst the debris.

Away from the pull of our economic centres, marginalised regions are witnessing a demographic and cultural collapse. Ways of life become stories, stories become history, and as the city grows the memory fades.

But things grow from the cracks of ruin, and in the cracks of great change are small stories. In an abandoned valley, one village’s precarious attempt to survive offers a series of reflections on our changing relationship with the countryside and as such with the natural world itself.

ABOUT THE DIRECTOR

Christopher Thomson (born London, 1985) is a writer and filmmaker living and working between England, Italy, Austria and Turkey. His work concerns the perception of landscape and the significance of place, often exploring the marginal spaces that give clues to our contemporary condition. He has published books and maps as well as producing video works, and curates the arts festival ‘Harvest’. The New Wild is his first feature film.
