SYNOPSIS

BANANAS!* is a suspenseful, layer-peeling, court room drama chronicle contextualized within the global politics of food and First vs. Third world dynamics.

Directed by Fredrik Gertten, Sweden's pre-eminent documentarian and investigative journalist, BANANAS!* focuses on a slippery fact trail and a landmark and highly controversial legal case pitting a dozen Nicaraguan plantation workers against Dole Food Corporation and its alleged usage of a deadly banned pesticide and its probable link to generations of sterilized workers.

Central to both the film and case is Juan "Accidentados" Dominguez, a Los Angeles-based personal injury attorney who, although iconic within the Latino community for his ubiquitous billboard ads, is unquestionably facing the biggest case and challenge in his career.

As the legal representation on the first Nicaraguan sterility case to be tried in US courts, Dominguez and his colleague, Duane C. Miller, are breaking new ground. Theirs is a bellwether case: The first of thousands of cases awaiting trial in Nicaragua and the first legal case where foreign farm workers were allowed to testify against an American multinational corporation before a full jury on U.S. soil. At stake are the futures of generations of workers, their families as well as the culture of global, multinational business.

This case has been followed by experts and companies all over the world. If Dominguez is successful, it could rock the economic foundations of Dole and Dow, and would open the US courts to other global victims of US-based multinationals. It would represent a new day in international justice, and there are further cases of a similar nature coming up next in many jurisdictions.

BANANAS!* is a court room drama covering the case of the 12 Nicaraguan banana workers who have sued Dole in what has become one of the most controversial trials. Cameras inside the court and interviews with Dominguez and the plaintiffs take the audience directly to the story.

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

My dream as a filmmaker is to create a piece of work that can travel into the hearts and minds of the audience. For me, it is what is between the lines that matters the most in telling the story. Through my film, BANANAS!*, I am hopeful that viewers will see the lives of the workers who are at risk: the people who are paying the price of hundred years of banana history. These are the workers, the families and the communities who are suffering from poverty and from the disaster of the chemicals left on their soil and floating in their water.

I also want to tell the human story – one that moves the audience with a strong narrative arc. As a filmmaker, I believe in complexity and in characters that make you feel something or sometimes just make you wonder.

Juan Dominguez, the attorney for the banana workers, is a great character. He has much at stake to win or to lose. He is also bridging the locations of the story from the poverty laden banana plantation communities in Chinandega, Nicaragua to the wealthy and corporate Los Angeles, California in the United States.

BANANAS!* follows a historic first court case in Los Angeles Superior Court, and ends with a verdict from the jury. That verdict, however, is still under appeal.

In April 2009, Judge Chaney - who presided over the plantation worker's case - decided to kick out those cases represented by Juan Dominguez. This happened after the film was finished. Because of this new development, we decided to make a change with updated title cards at the film's end reflecting Judge Chaney's rulings. So far, Juan Dominguez has not been formally charged with anything. So basically, nothing has changed and everything remains status quo.

On May 8, 2009, Dole Foods wrote their first "cease and desist" letter to me, my producer, our production company and to the Los Angeles Film Festival. Suddenly, we the filmmakers became a part of our own film. We were transformed into the role of David – the underdog battling the corporate Goliath – Dole Foods. This legal battle continued for more than five months.

Dole Foods filed a defamation lawsuit against us on July 8, 2009. We were forced to expend a painfully large amount of money and time to defend ourselves from these wrongful accusations. We continued in our fight against Dole and to gather support from around the globe and in our home country of Sweden. Then on October 15, 2009, we prevailed, as Dole Foods withdrew this unjustified lawsuit. And now, this film can continue to be seen by all without the threat of legal action looming over it. I am pleased that we can share BANANAS!* with you.

TELLEZ VS. DOLE: A TIMELINE

Background

During the 1970s, the pesticide DBCP (Dibromochloropropane) was used extensively on banana plantations all over the world. DBCP, originally synthesized in 1955, had many brand names, such as Nemagon and Fumazone.

DBCP was used to protect many different crops: vegetables, nuts, fruits, beans and cotton. The target pest was nematodes, tiny worms living in the soil, feeding on the roots. The pesticide was either pumped directly into the ground, or sprayed into the air with irrigation guns.<sup>1</sup>

In 1977, employees who had handled DBCP at the Occidental Chemical plant in California were found to be sterile. Within months, the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) had suspended most uses of the chemical.<sup>2</sup>

In 1983, Sacramento attorney Duane Miller won a $4.9 million judgement against Dow on behalf of six of the Occidental plant workers. Two years later, the EPA permanently banned the use of DBCP in the United States.<sup>3</sup>

In March 1990, the Texas court announced they would allow cases with a foreign location as place of incident. This was not possible before due to a legal doctrine called “forum non conveniens”, which said lawsuits should be heard in the countries where the damage occurred.<sup>4</sup>

In 1992, this shift in regulation made it possible for 1,000 Costa Rican workers and their lawyers to win a case against Standard fruit (now Dole). The corporation agreed to pay $20 million to the affected workers. After legal fees, each worker was left with $1,500 to $15,000, depending on individual circumstances.<sup>5</sup>

In 1993, a class-action lawsuit was filed in Texas by more than 16,000 banana plantation workers from Costa Rica, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and the Philippines. The target was several fruit and chemical companies, including Dole, Chiquita, Del Monte, Dow, Shell and Occidental. The companies agreed to pay a total of $41.5 million in 1997 to those who proved they were sterile. However, when all legal fees were paid, the affected workers received relatively small payments.<sup>6</sup>

Nemagon Movement

The Nicaraguan Nemagon movement is the strongest independent popular movement in modern Nicaragua. It started up in the early nineties when former banana workers started to share strange experiences, like children with birth defects, women having miscarriage after miscarriage and the men seemed to be sterile. Itching skin, fire inside, dying from kidney failure.

Under the name ASOTRAEXDAN (Association of Workers and Former Workers with Claims against Nemagon), this movement started marching, protesting, demanding justice, health care, coffins to their dead. An in-depth story about this can be found in the Envio Magazine article Victims of Nemagon hit the road (June, 2005).

In 1999, ASOTRAEXDAN began to push for a law to be passed in Nicaragua that would allow Nicaraguan workers to sue foreign companies. The law, known as "law 364", was registered in January 2001. In short, law 364 was directly intended to give DBCP victims and their relatives the right to demand compensation from the companies who imported and applied the chemical in Nicaragua. The U.S. Embassy in Nicaragua instantly criticized the law. They claimed the law being unfair to the trans-national companies, and in March 2002, the Nicaraguan attorney general submitted a movement to the Nicaraguan Supreme Court to declare law 364 unconstitutional.<sup>7</sup>

In December 2002, Nicaragua's Supreme Court ordered Dow Chemical Co., Shell Chemical Co. and Dole Food Co. to pay $490 million in compensation to 583 Nicaraguan banana workers. This landmark case was lead by plaintiff attorneys Thomas Girardi and Walter Lack, the same lawyers who fought the Erin Brockovich toxicity suit (which later became the blockbuster movie starring Julia Roberts).<sup>8</sup>

Neither Dow nor any of the other companies participated in the trial. Dow said they will not pay and called the judgment "unenforceable" because the case was supposed to be moved to a U.S. court. They also pointed at the previous claim of law 364 being unconstitutional. One year later, in October 2003, a judge in Los Angeles ruled that the judgment could not be enforced against the companies because they weren't properly named or legally notified in the Nicaraguan court action.<sup>9</sup>

In April 2007, Amvac Chemical Co., one of the companies who produced and sold DBCP in the 1970s, agreed to pay a total of $300,000 to 13 Nicaraguan workers. In court papers, the company called the agreement a "compromise of disputed claims" and denied any wrongdoing.<sup>10</sup>

Tellez Versus Dole

In 2004, Los Angeles based attorney Juan Dominguez teamed up with Duane Miller. Dominguez travelled to Nicaragua and started to register workers claiming the chemical had afflicted them. Over 10,000 clients were registered in Nicaragua alone.

BANANAS!*

In July 2007, the case was brought up in the Los Angeles Superior Court. Twelve workers alleged sterilization and accused Dole Food Co. and Dow Chemical Co. of negligence and fraudulent concealment in using DBCP. The case was unique since no similar case had ever been presented to jurors.<sup>11</sup>

The companies acknowledged that DBCP can be linked to male sterility and that the product was used in Nicaraguan banana plantations. Dow also acknowledged that the possibility of harm existed, but said the product was safe as long as instructions were followed. Also, they claimed the quantities of DBCP were too small, and the open-air conditions too diffuse to harm workers. The case at the Occidental plant where American workers were left sterile, involved much higher levels of the chemical, the companies claimed.<sup>12</sup>

Plaintiffs' lawyer Duane Miller pointed to the fact that Dole in 1977 demanded Dow to continue deliver DBCP, or else Dow would be in breach of a contract. This occurred after Dow had stopped their production because of the health warnings. This proves Dole continued to use the pesticide even after they knew it could be harmful to the workers and people who lived nearby<sup>13</sup>

In November 2007, the Los Angeles jury awarded $3.2 million to six of the twelve workers in compensatory damages. Jurors found that DBCP was defective and that its risks outweighed its benefits. They also found that Dole actively concealed the danger from its own workers.

Dole contended that the chemical was not defective if administered properly, and Dole denied that it had fraudulently concealed the danger. Dole called the verdicts unjust and later appealed.<sup>14</sup>

Two weeks later, the jury added an additional $2.5 million in punitive damages against Dole as punishment for concealing the dangers of DBCP.

One of Dole's attorneys, Rick McKnight, said the verdict was "a huge defeat" for the workers. "It doesn't even pay their costs, much less their bills", he said.<sup>15</sup>

Duane Miller said the verdict sends an important message to Dole: "It lets [them] know that they're accountable for what they do, even if they do it south of our border", he said. "Our reputation as a country is partially dependent on the reputations of our corporations doing things overseas".<sup>16</sup>

But the case was not closed. In March 2008, Judge Victoria Chaney reduced the punitive damages from $2.5 million to six workers – to $1.58 million to four workers. Chaney found that because Dole was a user of the pesticide, not a marketer, the firm could not be subjected to liability without fault. She also reasoned that punitive damages may not be used to punish "a domestic corporation for injuries that occurred only in a foreign country".<sup>17</sup>

The Fraud Case

In April 2009, Dole claimed that all but one of 11 plaintiffs in two upcoming DBCP cases<sup>18</sup> had never worked on banana plantations and that the men were paid and coached by their attorneys. Several witnesses testified on videotape, some of them anonymous (the "John Doe witnesses") since they feared for their lives for exposing the fraud.

Judge Victoria Chaney instantly dismissed the cases.

"We'll never know if anybody in Nicaragua was actually injured or harmed by the alleged wrongful conduct of the defendants, and people will never have the opportunity to learn, since this fraud is so pervasive and extensive that it has forever contaminated even our own ability to ever know the truth", Chaney said during the April 23 hearing.

Juan Dominguez, one of the lawyers representing the Nicaraguan workers, is ordered to appear before Los Angeles County Superior Court on June 17 for a hearing on sanctions for alleged contempt of court.

Our Comments

In the Tellez trial, the trial we filmed, both sides could use their best arguments and present their best evidence in front of a jury. All the evidence produced in the Tellez case is still valid. Dole admitted they kept using a pesticide that had been banned in the U.S. They even demanded that Dow Chemical Co. kept delivering it, despite the health warnings.

The fraud accusations are aimed directly at Juan Dominguez and the entire juridical system of Nicaragua. There are still millions of questions, and more voices need to be heard, voices that don't belong to Dole.

Judge Refuses to Stop BANANAS!***

On May 8th, another hearing about the fraud case was held in Los Angeles Superior Court.

During the hearing, BANANAS!* was subject to a discussion between Judge Victoria Chaney and Dole attorney Andrea Neuman. The trailer for the film was presented for Chaney during the hearing.

Neuman had reacted strongly to several images in the trailer and wanted to bring up the film for discussion. The film depicts, among others, lawyers representing the plaintiffs in the Tellez case. These lawyers were also involved in the two cases that Chaney threw out during the April hearings. Scenes from the court room during the Tellez trial is also included in the film, which is another reason why Neuman brought up the film.

At first, Neuman vaguely suggested that Chaney should stop the film, which she presented as a “shockingly misleading and defamatory piece”. Chaney instantly refused, referring to the First Amendment:

“I’m very proud of our constitution, /.../ and one of the reasons why I’m very proud of it is the First Amendment right to free speech, and there is a little issue to me about prior restraint on free speech that I think you may be asking me to do something about here. No?”

Neuman agreed, but clarified a wish that the law firm of Miller, Axline & Sawyer (which represented the plaintiffs in the Tellez trial together with the office of Juan J. Dominguez) maybe could help her in getting the BANANAS!* director Fredrik Gertten to think twice. Michael Axline, who was attending the hearing, agreed to send a letter to Gertten with a copy of the latest court orders and transcripts to inform him about the latest developments in the case.

The “shockingly misleading and defamatory” content in the trailer were also described in detail by Neuman:

“Even if we now know the Tellez trial to have been fraudulent, we certainly know that there was no allegation in that trial that DBPC caused the death of anyone, although there’s multiple funeral processions in this trailer, there’s also a plane spraying chemical, which we all know never happened with DBCP. Now that we know the Tellez trial was a fraud, the movie is all the more defamatory.”

Our Comments

First of all, the Tellez trial was very real, and all the evidence produced in the case is still valid. Dole admitted they kept using a pesticide that had been banned in the U.S. They even demanded that Dow Chemical Co. kept delivering it, despite the health warnings.

Second, the film is not only about DBCP or the Tellez case, which seems to be a misconception here. The funeral in the film is the funeral of a man named Alberto Rosales. We are not saying he died from exposure to DBCP, but he did die from kidney damages, which is a common symptom from pesticide exposure. He worked his whole life on banana plantations. Yes, it is difficult to prove scientifically, but pesticides have had extremely negative effects on the people and environment of many areas of Central America.

Third, we are not saying that the plane in the trailer is spraying DBCP. We are saying that pesticides are very much still in use.

Also, nobody in the courtroom had seen the complete film. The above discussion only concerned the trailer.

Chaney's final remark to Neuman:

"Just so we are clear, I am not in any way going to make, and I will not consider, any request for prior restraint on free speech. Okay? So, don't ask me to go try and contact the film company. I don't have jurisdiction over them. But even if I did, don't ask me for it."

The lawsuit against BANANAS!***

On July 7th, Dole filed a civil lawsuit in Los Angeles Superior Court against WG Film, director Fredrik Gertten and producer Margarete Jangård over the screenings of BANANAS!* during the Los Angeles Film Festival. The lawsuit claimed that the film defames Dole.

On September 11th, WG Film responded the Dole lawsuit by filing an Anti-SLAPP Motion. As set forth in the motion, Dole's lawsuit seeks to "poison the fountain of free speech" by intimidating anyone who speaks out on this important issue of public concern who does not comport with Dole's "spin" on recent events pertaining to DBCP litigation.

In addition to filing an Anti-SLAPP Motion, WG Film also filed a Cross-Complaint against Dole, seeking to recover damages for Dole's improper tactics in interfering with the film's premiere and its participation in the Los Angeles Film Festival.

The lawsuit was widely covered in international press and caused a lively debate in Swedish media about free speech. Several international film and journalist organizations sent letters to Dole asking them withdraw the lawsuit in the name of free speech.

On October 15th, Dole withdrew their lawsuit. In a press release, Dole said they had made their decision in light of the free speech concerns being expressed in Sweden, although they continues to believe in the merits of its case.

An updated timeline covering the events around the lawsuit can be found online at: www.bananasthemovie.com/bananas-under-fire-timeline

KEY SUBJECTS

Juan J. Dominguez, esq.

Juan Dominguez is a Cuban-American personal injury lawyer known in Southern California for his ubiquitous and iconic “ACCIDENTES” ads on buses and billboards throughout the region. He has built his career and successful private practice on a largely under represented Latino clientele. The US Super Lawyer Club has designated him as a “Super Lawyer”. He is co-lead counsel on behalf of twelve Nicaraguan banana workers against Dole Food Co. in a groundbreaking legal battle.

Duane Miller, esq.

San Francisco-based Duane Miller is the first attorney to successfully fight a toxic tort case involving DBCP. Miller is hired by Dominguez to be the chief litigator representing the plaintiffs in court.

Rick McKnight, esq.

Rick McKnight is the chief corporate attorney representing Dole Food in the trial who seeks to ensure that the company is not hit by a precedent-setting decision.

David DeLorenzo

David DeLorenzo is the President and Chief Executive Officer of Dole Food. He appears as a witness in court during the trial.

Alberto Rosales

The burial ceremony of Alberto -- a Nicaraguan banana plantation worker for most of his life -- is the opening scene of the film. His death, his family members strongly believe, was likely caused by pesticide exposure.

Carmen Rosales

Carmen is the late Alberto’s wife who too worked on banana plantations, but left after losing her first two children. She is undergoing chemotherapy treatment for a cancerous tumor the day her husband dies.

Byron Rosales

One of Alberto’s and Carmen’s three children. Byron works as a math teacher to support his family. He is seeking justice after the death of his father.

Father Bayardo Ocon

Father Ocon is the Roman Catholic priest during the burial sermon. He is a staunch critic of landowners and US trans-national corporations, which he accuses of “immoral practices” that cause the death and suffering of many members of his community.

The 12 plaintiffs

Twelve former banana workers are the initial plaintiffs in the Tellez vs. Dole Food trial. They claim that the pesticide DBCP made them sterile, and that Dole actively concealed the danger from them.
